This is the most informative article I've read about it – <http://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2013/01/how-organizing-for-action-plans-to-keep-obamas-foot-soldiers-enlisted/267384/>.

Right now, the Obama campaign site includes info about this new org, featuring a blog from the new executive director who is leaving the White House to run it from Chicago. They'll also have a DC office.

Since Priorities USA did not file a 1024, I would think they would follow the same self-declaring path here. But maybe not.

I know--this is the second article I've read about this. You may want to look for the earlier one - it may say whether they intend to apply
